

2020 Practice Exam 2 Mcq

Section I

Questions 33–40 are based on the following passage.

This passage below is a draft.

(1) As America's healthcare system becomes more complex and doctors more specialized, consumers of healthcare may wonder how to evaluate the quality of their physicians. (2) Surely one may consult the subjective "gut feeling" that a patient may feel about a physician: that they have a good "report" with their doctor. (3) In recent years, insurance companies, hospitals, and professional medical societies have posited a variety of "objective" metrics to inform patients of doctor quality.

(4) One such metric is patient evaluations, which can only be conducted in large healthcare systems. (5) In the pursuit of maximizing the patient experience, interested parties consult patients with a post-visit survey. (6) The physician and the facilities are therefore rated from the patient's perspective. (7) Another approach to quantifying doctor quality is examining outcomes. (8) For instance, when a patient visits a hospital for a surgery, they may be contacted for follow-up information on how the patient has recovered in the short, medium, and long terms.

(9) But these types of standardized approaches that aim to measure physician quality are flawed and unfair. (10) The patient experience may not accurately reflect the quality of healthcare the patient received. (11) Physicians could boost these ratings by simply decreasing waiting room time or offering more comfortable exam tables, regardless of the quality of medical attention offered. (12) Further, attributing patient outcomes solely to the performance of a doctor, with no regard to patient lifestyle (diet and tobacco use, for instance) will certainly push physicians away from treating the most vulnerable patients, such as those who suffer from obesity, poverty, and congenital diseases.

(13) Nobody wants to choose a doctor primarily based on the accoutrements of the waiting room. (14) Further, it would not be desirable to potentially leave the most vulnerable patients to fend for themselves. (15) Perhaps the best approach would be a system that allows doctors to be evaluated by experts in their field—their peers. (16) Medical professionals can look at data and outcomes within their proper context in order to best communicate essential information about a physician's quality to America's health care consumers.

33. After sentence 1, the writer wants to provide a convincing explanation for why it is important for healthcare consumers to learn more about physicians. Which sentence below best accomplishes this goal?

- (A) Specialists are largely similar due to the nature of their work, so the most important factor in finding a doctor is a convenient schedule.
- (B) No two doctors are alike, and quality healthcare stems from factors as diverse as a physician's experience to the physician's relationship with patients.
- (C) The complexity of the healthcare system has made it nearly impossible to learn anything about a doctor before going in for a visit.
- (D) Recent trends in medicine towards team-oriented healthcare have made doctors interchangeable with one another.
- (E) Learning about the personal lives and interests of physicians is key to finding a doctor with whom a patient may develop a good relationship.

34. The writer wants to add a phrase at the beginning of sentence 3 (reproduced below), adjusting the capitalization as needed, to set up a relationship with the idea discussed in sentence 2.

In recent years, insurance companies, hospitals, and professional medical societies have posited a variety of metrics to inform patients of doctor quality.

Which of the following choices best accomplishes this goal?

- (A) In other words,
- (B) Similarly,
- (C) For example,
- (D) Furthermore,
- (E) However,

35. The writer wants to add more information to the second paragraph (sentences 4–8) to further develop the examples in the paragraph. All of the following pieces of evidence help achieve this purpose EXCEPT which one?

- (A) Information about the types of questions posed on patient surveys
- (B) How patient feedback is translated into a doctor rating
- (C) The types of illnesses that bring patients into a doctor's office
- (D) Factors that are measured in the follow up patient visits
- (E) How long patients are tracked following a medical procedure
